

Course Overview

When you study A level English Literature you will be required to read widely and independently from both set texts and others that you have selected for yourself. You will be asked to engage critically and creatively with a substantial body of texts and ways of responding to them, whilst developing and effectively applying your knowledge of literary analysis and evaluation. Contexts of the texts you are reading will be explored and others' interpretations of them evaluated.

You will read a range of exciting and challenging literary texts, including novels, poetry and plays from across the last 500 years as well as 21st century texts, all of which have stood the test of time and proved themselves to be great writing. You will be encouraged to read widely, independently and in-depth.

TEACHERS SAY...
